“Skill Generalization: What Does This Really Mean?” – Do these scenarios sound familiar to you: A child behaves one way with one parent, but a different way with another? They use their language with adults but not peers. Their alphabet seems strong at school but not at home. Why does this happen? Transferring and continuing skill use across all environments, people and scenarios both accurately and fluently is the hallmark of true mastery of a skill. This training will address these issues, and provide concrete strategies and tactics to help ensure that the skills we teach produce generalized outcomes.
